Norwegian Said to Spy For Iraq and Soviet

OSLO, March 19 (Reuters) — A prosecutor said in a statement today that a Norwegian Foreign Ministry official, already charged with spying for the Soviet Union, also spied for Iraq.

The Foreign Ministry official, Arne Treholt, 41 years old, a former deputy minister, told police he received $50,000 in exchange for classified documents handed to an Iraqi official now serving with the Iraqi Embassy in Paris, the statement said.

Mr. Treholt told the police that in May 1980 he made contact with the Iraqi Embassy in Athens. He had been asked to supply information to which he had access, the statement said. In August 1981, an agreement was reached on an annual remuneration of $20,000.

The statement said Mr. Treholt told the police that he had several times supplied classified documents to a man identified as Radhi A. Mohammed who, according to the statement, was known to have been a prominent agent for the Iraqi intelligence service.

After Mr. Treholt's arrest in January on charges of passing secrets to the K.G.B., five Soviet diplomats were expelled from Norway and four others who had previously served in Oslo were told they would not be allowed to return.
